"Y Combinator only funds AI wrappers now."

I kept hearing this. So I decided to check.

I pulled data on every single company from the last 5 YC batches. 793 startups. 1,625 founders. Scraped their bios, tags, industries, partner assignments - everything.

Then I ran the numbers and built a full interactive dashboard breaking all of this down: https://lnkd.in/dFYQF2N4

Just a weekend rabbit hole that got out of hand.

The wrapper thing? Mostly a myth.

Only 15% are thin wrappers on LLMs. And it's actually going DOWN, 17% a year ago, under 13% now.

The real story? Deep tech is surging. Companies training their own models, building robots, doing actual research - that jumped to 29% of the latest batch.

YC isn't getting lazy. It's getting pickier.

Each partner has a distinct fingerprint. If you're pitching YC, match your company type to the right partner - it matters.

Diana Hu = infra, Garry Tan = contrarian bets, Harj Taggar = enterprise SaaS, Nicolas Dessaigne is the "healthcare + security" partner, Pete Koomen is the "classic SaaS" partner.

Did a detailed pattern analysis of your past few investments, you might want to check it out - Jared Friedman, Gustaf Alströmer 🇸🇪, Brad Flora, Tyler Bosmeny, Harj Taggar, Diana Hu, Jon Xu, Pete Koomen, Garry Tan

Hoping that more such "weekend rabbit holes" go out of hand.
This is great, Krishna!
